March Madness Library Style: 16 Enter ... Only 1 Leaves. Get ready for the 2020 March Madness - Tournament of Books! The Tournament of Books is an annual battle royale between 16 of Evan Hardy's most popular novels. Starting on Monday, March 16th, staff and students will be able to vote for their favorite books via the LibGuide. Each voting round will last approximately one week. Books that move on to the next round will be determined by popular vote until there is only one book left standing. Last year's winner, for the second year in a row, was Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone. Does it have enough staying power to hold onto the title as EHCI's Top Book of the Year, or will a new contender knock it out of top spot? Only you have the power to decide, so get out, start reading, and vote for your favorites! For more information, see Mrs. Morton in the Library!

Did you know that April is National Poetry Month? Celebrate your love of poetry by entering the upcoming EHCI National Poetry Month Contest! Students are invited to create and enter their own original poetry and artwork to win great prizes! Beginning in April, look for full contest details on EHCI's LibGuide or see Mrs. Morton in the library for more information.

What is the purpose of Unified souls?
Unified souls is a way for students with special needs, to partner up with typical students in school and learn social skills and become a part of the community. Mr. Case says that he notices students, with special needs, are becoming more confident and comfortable with their surroundings. Initially, it was difficult for them to adjust in high school. However, through this club they are able to learn everyday skills that can be utilized in daily life. Even though this club is focused towards helping special students, anyone from our school can be a part of it.

The BTS brand has never been stronger. Their new album, Map of the Soul: 7, is already a huge global hit. It sold two million copies in its first two hours in South Korea and is projected to do bigger first-week numbers stateside than Justin Bieber did. The shareholders are satisfied. The Army is spoken for. The K-pop superstars have emerged as the product arm of a worldwide commercial apparatus that’d make the Svengalis behind turn-of-the-millennium teen-pop salivate. The members of BTS maintain that there’s still a beating heart at the core of the machine. Authenticity is part of their appeal, and they use vaguely philosophical, Jungian blueprints to make music about being true to one’s self. 7, which follows (and includes much of) the 2019 mini-album Persona, is part memoir, part fan service, part amateur psych eval. Though the music is flattened enough to appeal to just about everyone, it can still tap into something enchanting, but the glimpses of personality are fleeting.
Who is responsible for the missing Malaysian Flight (MH370)

At 12:42 a.m, on the night of March 8, 2014, an airplane operated by Malaysia Airlines took off from Kuala Lumpur and turned towards Beijing, climbing to its assigned altitude of 35,000 feet. Fariq Hamid, the first officer, was flying the airplane. His trainer was the pilot in command, a man named Zaharie Ahmad Shah. Zaharie, was extremely dedicated and skilled in his field, and as a result, he even installed an elaborate Microsoft flight simulator at his home. In the cabin, there were 10 flight attendants, all of them were Malaysian. They had 227 passengers to care for, including five children. Many people on this flight were traveling to China, to start a new life, or returning from their holiday.

Eleven minutes after the plane took off, it closed in on a waypoint near the start of Vietnamese air-traffic jurisdiction, the controller at Kuala Lumpur Center radioed, “Malaysian three-seven-zero, contact Ho Chi Minh”. To this command Zaharie answered, “Good night. Malaysian three-seven-zero.” this was the last the world heard from MH370. Five seconds after the Malaysian flight entered Vietnam, its symbol on the radar disappeared. Normally when a flight goes missing, the aeronautical team of that country is notified within an hour. But with this flight, the emergency response began at 6:32 am, five hours after it went missing.

The search for MH370 was an international effort. It included 34 ships and 28 aircraft from seven different countries. However, the MH370 was nowhere to be seen. Within a matter of days, data from primary radars was salvaged and it was revealed that after MH370 disappeared off the radar it took a steep turn towards the Malaysian Peninsula.

A conspiracy theory that can provide an answer to this situation is that, Captain Zaharie, parachuted out of the plane to meet someone waiting on a boat. According to the theory, he took fake IDs to start a new life, depressurized the aircraft to kill the passengers before jumping out and letting the plane crash into the sea. I somewhat agree with this theory, however, I do not believe that Zaharie continued his life with a fake ID. Instead, I presume he crashed the plane while he was still inside. A theory by Bernard Lagan, writer for Times News, states that five years before MH370 crashed, Captain Zaharie was clinically depressed. Also, when Captain Zaharie’s simulator was looked through, a route identical to the flight’s was found. All in all, I believe that Zaharie had planned this from the start.
